“Who's Going to Law School? Recent Trends in Enrollment by Gender, Race, and Nationality”

Coauthored by Miranda Li and Philip Yao

In this study, we examine recent U.S. law school enrollment trends. With comprehensive data from the most recent decade, we discuss how the demographic composition of law students has changed since the Great Recession. We analyze enrollment data by gender, race, ethnicity, and nationality, with particular attention to Asian Americans, who too often remain an invisible minority in contemporary discourse on diversity.
